1. When the Commission was established a small number of records officers were seconded from other State Government departments to set up a records system. By the end of the Commission's life, records staff had spent 115,000 hours processing an estimated 1,100,000 documents from external sources and stored an estimated 3,750,000 pieces of paper in 2,500 boxes. They arranged the optical scanning of 52,000 pages of transcript and processed more than 49,000 pages of Commission transcript and 4,500 Commission exhibits. As well, Commission investigators and records staff vetted millions of documents offsite in the course of procuring essential material.

2. Mail and documents received by the Commission were classified generally as administrative or operational. Administrative documents consisted of all outgoing correspondence, including subpoenas, other requests for information and letters in response to Commission requests, while operational material was that produced to, or seized by, the Commission. Administrative documents were managed according to modern indexing and filing systems adapted to meet the peculiarities of the Commission's needs. Operational material, which included books, stamp albums, coins, bullion, computer printouts, transcripts and framed displays, was stored according to its value and managed under administrative procedures.

3. All material entering the Commission was registered and indexed in two databases. An "initial registration" database provided an immediate general summary of documents received, while a "document registration" database, compiled after close examination of documents, provided detailed descriptions for use by investigators.

4. Incoming mail was processed in accordance with the Financial Administration and Audit Act. All documents seized by or presented to the Commission were processed immediately by records staff. This involved date stamping envelopes, header or first pages, sequential numbering of all documents, and the issuing of receipts for filing to investigators and document owners.

5. On initial registration, material was recorded on computer. Details included the daily sequential number, source, receipt number, arrival method, term of reference, type of material and a brief description of the material. This data was immediately available to Counsel and investigators.

6. Initial registration involved staff allocating a unique seven-digit reference number to operational material. Clear, plastic stick-on labels with bar-coded representations of numbers were fixed to documents and other items to help tracking. The fixing of labels was the only change made to documents and other material held by the Commission. Internal Commission files and documents also were labelled this way.

7. After initial registration, material was further examined by records staff and details of documents and other material were recorded for entry into the document registration database. These details included the document number, the source, date and method of receipt, the document type, title and date, its confidentiality status, the sender, receiver, term of reference, relationship to other material, storage location, disposal options, amounts of money referred to, a document summary and keywords.

8. Counsel and investigators were then able to find documents in storage through searches of the database, using Indepol text retrieval software. The movement of original operational material within the Commission was restricted and working copies were made whenever possible. When original material was needed, only authorised staff were allowed access and then under strict controls. Movements of documents had to be recorded in a ledger and authorised. Boxes of documents could also be released for use and tracked through the bar-coding system.

9. While the scrutiny of material was labour intensive, it was imperative for successful cross-referencing and use in investigation and hearings. The databases will also be invaluable for disposing of records when the inquiry ends. Among issues to be considered at disposal are whether material has to be transferred to another authority, returned to owners, archived or destroyed.

10. As well as document management, records staff supervised out-going mail and photocopying, and were involved in field visits to retrieve documents, liaison work with investigators, and hearing room support and reception.

Recording and transcription services

11. Hearing, recording and transcription services were provided to the Commission by Verbatim Reporters (1980). The process involved recording each hearing on two audio tapes, one of which was kept as a permanent record of proceedings. The second was used to produce hard copy and computer disk versions of the transcript. This allowed Commissioners and Counsel hard copy and computer access to transcript within 24 hours of hearings.

12. Public versions, with suppressed and in-camera evidence excluded, were made available at a cost of $1.50 per page, up to a maximum cost of $75 per day for hard copy and $60 per disk (Word Perfect and DOS formats) per hearing, per term of reference, per day. These rates were considerably less than those charged by other Commissions and courts throughout Australia. Revenue from the sale of transcript to 15 September 1992 totalled $334,400.

13. Several organisations including the Western Australian Parliamentary Library, Official Corruption Commission, Crown Law Department, Rothwells Task Force, the Ministry of the Premier and Cabinet and the major political parties, received the daily public transcript free. Curtin University of Technology Library negotiated for and received the transcript at a discounted rate.

14. In addition the public transcript was available for perusal on a computer monitor within the Commission's media room for use by journalists. Hard copy could be viewed by the public within the precincts of the Commission at no charge.

Information Technology

15. Experience in other Royal Commissions and inquiries suggested that information technology would play a significant role in the operation of this Commission, particularly in the areas of document management, investigations and office systems.

16. A senior officer from State Information Technology, Department of State Services, was seconded to the Commission during December 1990, to establish and manage the Commission's information technology requirements. As well, the Commission, through the Crown Law Department, engaged Corporate Systems Planning to help establish the initial network in the Commission's temporary premises. This network provided immediate word-processing facilities and the foundation for the future expanded systems.

17. The Commission then had to determine its ongoing systems requirements based on the likely day-to-day work of the inquiry. Griffin Rowe and Associates, a Sydney firm of solicitors experienced in helping to establish Royal Commissions, inquiries, fraud investigations and prosecutions, was chosen to report, in conjunction with the Commission's I.T. Manager, on the Commission's requirements.

18. Griffin Rowe and Associates' experience was useful in defining the needs of the Commissioners, Counsel Assisting, investigators and administrative and clerical groups in dealing with document acquisition and management, information storage and retrieval, security and privacy, imaging systems, specialised professional software, information relationships and cross referencing, document presentation at hearings, dissemination of information and access to other systems.

19. It was necessary for the Commission to carefully assess its needs and move quickly to have in place a system that was simple to operate but effective, so that Counsel, investigators and analysts could use the facilities from the start of business rather than be required to change to a new system further into the inquiry. Essentially, systems were built around the Commission's needs rather than being overburdened with unnecessary esoteric features.

20. The systems required by the Commission included:

- Word processing

- Document management and control
- Easy input of data from different sources
- Text search and retrieval
- An ability to cross match information
- For ease of report writing a facility to copy information from data bases into word processing
- A capacity to sort alphabetically, numerically and by dates
- A capacity for formatting printed reports and analysis
- Spread sheets and charting
- Graphics
- Systems to capture documents in electronic format
- Electronic mail
- Diary management
- Investigation management — run sheets

21. Commission staff developed systems which contained substantial data bases of information. These were held on the Commission's in-house computers and on its facilities at the Department of State Services Mount Street Bureau and included:

The Commission's Own Transcript: (Titan)

These comprised three data bases:

- Public Hearings including in-camera and suppressed evidence
- Public Hearings excluding in-camera and suppressed evidence
- Private Hearings (confidential) transcripts

Other Transcripts: (Titan)

In addition, data bases were established for each of the following transcripts:

- Beltech Corporation - NCSC Hearings
- Katanning Holdings - NCSC Hearings
- Anfrank Nominees & Orse v. Rothwells Ltd
- Anfrank Nominees judgment

McCusker hearings
Rothwells Ltd - NCSC Hearings
R v. Lloyd (Western Collieries), January 1990
Spedley Securities Ltd v. Bond Brewing Investments Pty Ltd
R v. Martin & Brush, April 1988
R v. Hugall (Katanning Holdings), August 1990
R v. Martin & Smith (Phone tapping), October 1990
The Companies Code (WA) and Austasia Finance
Bainton Interview Transcripts
Vrisakis Transcripts

The Commission's Document Summaries/RMS: (Indepol)

The Commission developed a structured data base for the document registration system. The software used (INDEPOL) permitted expansion to incorporate the investigative and analytical cross matching functions necessary.

This was the Commission's records/property management system and comprised summaries of all documents received by the Commission as well as the Commission's records/property management system.

This information was held on an ICL computer located at the Department of State Services, Bureau Services Mount St facility.

McCusker Report: (Titan)

The complete text of Part One of the Mc Cusker report was held in Titan on the Commission's internal network.

Foss Database: (Titan)

This was a copy of the Hon P.G. Foss's private data base, a compilation of news media extracts relating to W.A. Inc matters. It was volunteered by Mr Foss to assist the Commission with its inquiries.

Company/Officers: (Indepol)

The Company/Officer data base listed all companies registered in Western Australia, as at November 1989. This included International and Interstate Companies registered for business in Western Australia.

Rothwells Pty Ltd, L R Connell & Partners, Oakhill and Hugall's Financial Management, Accounting and Office Systems: (Infinity, Landmark and Uniplex)

These were copies of magnetic backup tapes of the above systems, copied by the Commission for its purposes. These systems were re-established by commission personnel on the specific hardware (Hewlett Packard and Olivetti) on which the software was designed to run.

Hansard: (Titan)

Parliamentary Debates (Hansard) from the last six months of 1987 to the end of public hearings were maintained in Titan on the Sun network. These were made available to the Commission conditionally, with the agreement of Parliament.

Chronology Data Base: (Titan)

A chronology of Rothwells related events established by Commission lawyers.

Biography Data Base: (Titan)

Biographical data of participants in Rothwells related matters, established by Commission lawyers.

Kingston Inquiry: (Titan)

Police (Internal Affairs) notes, records of interview and other documents relating to the City of Stirling terms of reference.

Donors List: (Titan)

Copy of Police ALP donors data base. Supplied by Internal Affairs for purpose of the Commission.

Swan Building Society Document Summary Data Base: (Titan)

A copy of Phillips Fox's data base of Swan Building Society documents in their possession.

Rothwells Documents: (Titan)

A copy of the Rothwells Task Force's document summary (property management system) data base. Supplied by the task force for the purposes of the Commission.

Rothwells WP: (Titan)

Copies of word processing documents extracted from the Rothwells Pty Ltd word processing systems.

Telephone Records: (Titan)

A record of international telephone calls, dates and times and the relevant sending and receiving telephone numbers.

Submissions: (Titan)

This data base comprised all of the final submissions by Counsel representing persons affected by the Commission's inquiry.

22. Officers assigned to the Commission developed an Investigators Run Sheet module within the INDEPOL package, which was available to the investigation teams and Counsel, as a management tool. Extensive use was also made of the other proprietary applications software available on the network, particularly electronic mail, calendar management and spreadsheet. The multimedia conversion facility was invaluable.

23. The computing hardware and software available for use within the Commission included:

Sun Network

The Sun network comprised; 1 x Sun 4/490, 1 x Sun SparcServer 2, 57 Sun workstations, 10 ASCII terminals, 14 Laser printers, 1 plotter, about 11 billion characters of disk storage and sundry other devices. In addition there were 11 Toshiba T5200 portable personal computers configured to connect to the network.

Lightweight Portable PCs

6 Toshiba T1200XE lightweight portable computers, 1 Toshiba T2000SXE Lightweight portable computer, 1 Toshiba T2000SX lightweight portable computer, 8 Canon bubble jet portable printers were used by investigators.

Desk Top Personal Systems

4 Desk top IBM PS/2 systems, 3 Toshiba Printers were utilised for Administrative Support and to provide Media Personnel independent access to transcripts.

External Facilities

The investigative software package INDEPOL, running on the Department of State Services Bureau's ICL machine, was utilised. The Commission purchased 1 x 2.5 Gb ICL Disk drive and CAFS Processor to ensure security of its data. The connection was via a 56 Kb line through data encryptors.

A communications link was also established through the Police Network to the Department of State Services IBM system which provided secure access to the Government's SNA network and a one way gateway to other external sources.

Olivetti

An Olivetti 3B2/600 and an Olivetti 3B2/400 were used to access the L R Connell and Partners, Oakhills and Hugalls accounting systems.

Multi Media Device and Scanner

The "Multi Media" conversion system enabled the conversion of data gathered from a range of sources on a wide variety of magnetic media types.

An Umax Document Scanner, with Omnipage software was utilised to input hard copy information.

HP 3000 Computer

The HP3000 was purchased to provide access to permit work on the Rothwells Accounting and Financial Management Systems.

Applications Software

The following major application programs were used during the course of the Commission:

Word Perfect 5.0.; Titan Text Retrieval; Indepol; Lotus 123; Omnipage; Intermedia Data Conversion software; Infinity Financial Software; Landmark Accounting Software; Robochart; Sun Desk Set; IPALink; Sun SNA; Word Perfect 5.1.; Windows 3; Block It; Virus Buster; Microsoft Works; Isys; PC Tools; Norton Utilities; Dr Solomans; Faslynx; Fasset; Microsoft Project and Uniplex.

The media

24. The Commission catered early for the expected influx of journalists by setting up a media room on the 12th floor of the National Mutual Centre. This room provided 24 desks for media representatives, telephone and power points, a modest sound booth for radio and television reporters bearing a name plate on the door, "Clark Kent", a small refrigerator, and a coin-operated cafe bar. News organisations installed their own telephones, facsimiles and computer systems. With a television monitor relaying proceedings from the main hearing room, the media room was in constant use and, on busy days, relieved pressure on the limited seating available to the public wishing to attend hearings. There was also a monitor installed on the 16th floor to enable Counsel Assisting and investigators to follow the proceedings without the necessity of attendance in person in the hearing rooms. In late 1991, as the Commission began split hearings, sound from a second hearing room was relayed to two smaller media rooms, also on the 12th floor. This option allowed for up to 40 media representatives on the 12th floor to move from hearing to hearing and file stories without disrupting proceedings on the floor above. The provision of a well-equipped media room meant that the 18 media seats in the main hearing room were filled only once, on opening day, 12 March 1991.

25. The Commission also agreed to allow journalists to use tape recorders in hearing rooms, subject to their use being unobtrusive so as not to disrupt proceedings, discreetly placed in media areas only and essentially as an aid to note taking. These recordings were not, under any circumstances, to be used for broadcast. While no study has been done of the benefit of allowing tape recorders to be used as an aid to journalists covering the inquiry, the Commissioners believe their use enhanced fair and accurate reporting of proceedings. They also reduced demand on the Commission to provide a contemporaneous transcript of hearings. On no occasion was their use disruptive of Commission hearings.

26. Limited television coverage of proceedings was also permitted. On the basis that television coverage of opening statements and closing submissions and of statements from the Commissioners would be allowed, the television networks installed at their expense a camera in the main hearing room on the 13th floor. Cabling and monitors were provided by the Commission. The camera, which had pan and tilt capabilities, was operated by the networks which arranged their own transmission facilities from the media room on the 12th floor. As a result, vision from the hearing room was able to be transmitted to the stations from the Natural Mutual Centre, which eliminated the need for outside broadcast vans in and around St George's Terrace in central Perth. On a few occasions, networks broadcast news bulletins directly from the media room and one station broadcast live the Commission's opening on 12 March. Such ready access to proceedings of this nature was unprecedented in Western Australia and may have contributed to the constant coverage of proceedings by the television networks.

27. The other major decision affecting the media concerned access to transcript and exhibits. The Commission recognised the need for speedy access to transcript and exhibits but was conscious of the cost involved. As a result, the daily transcript was provided, without cost, for viewing only, on a computer monitor in the media room. News organisations wanting to buy transcript could do so at the standard public rates.

28. Controlled access to exhibits was provided to allow journalists covering proceedings to better understand the examination of witnesses. This access meant copies of exhibits were handed to reporters as they were tendered. The exhibits could not be copied or photographed or removed from the Commission precinct. Journalists researching articles were also given access to exhibits, on days when the Commission was not sitting. Despite early teething problems, media access to exhibits quickly became part of proceedings. Journalists also respected the Commission's rulings when questions of the confidentiality of exhibits arose.

29. The demands on Counsel Assisting, prevented the Commission from acceding to media requests to begin hearings at 9.30 am and finish at 4 pm to ease pressures on news deadlines. It also declined a request for the use of lap-top computers in hearing rooms.

30. A small booklet, Guidelines for Journalists, was produced in February 1991 to help media representatives covering the Commission. It contained the terms of reference, biographical details of the Commissioners and Counsel Assisting, advice on hearing room manners, the Commission's preferred title, sitting times, building access, security, rules on smoking, parking and transport and the whereabouts of the toilets and canteen. The booklet also proved to be valuable for members of the public wanting to know about the Commission.

31. In March 1991, passes were distributed to media representatives to distinguish them as having privileges of access to the Commission not generally afforded to the general public. During the inquiry, 150 passes were distributed to reporters, camera operators, technicians, artists, and photographers.
